Ivory Coast - The West Africa Driving Force

- The economy of Ivory Coast is stable and currently growing, in the
- aftermath of political instability in recent decades. The Ivory Coast
- is largely market-based and depends heavily on the agricultural
- sector. Almost 70% of the Ivorian people are engaged in some form of agricultural
- activity. GDP per capita grew 82% in the 1960s, reaching a peak growth of 360% in
- the 1970s. But this proved unsustainable and it shrank by 28% in the 1980s and a
- further 22% in the 1990s. This coupled with high population growth resulted in a
- steady fall in living standards. Gross national product per capita, now rising again,
- was about US$727 in 1996. (It was substantially higher two decades ago.) After
- several years of lagging performance, the Ivorian economy began a comeback in 1994, due to the
- devaluation of the CFA franc and improved prices for cocoa and coffee, growth in non-traditional
- primary exports such as pineapples and rubber, limited trade and banking liberalization, offshore oil
- and gas discoveries, and generous external financing and debt rescheduling by multilateral lenders
- and France. The 50% devaluation of franc zone currencies on 12 January 1994 caused a one-time
- jump in the inflation rate to 26% in 1994, but the rate fell sharply in 1996-1999. Moreover, government
- adherence to donor-mandated reforms led to a jump in growth to 5% annually in 1996-99. A majority
