

Homeopathy in Dental Diseases

In homoeopathic system of medicine the only principle to be strictly followed by physicians in order to eliminate the distressing symptoms of any ailment is "Similie Similibus Curentor" i.e. Let likes be treated by likes. Because homoeopathic medicines are proved on healthy human beings and the symptoms they produce in them are carefully recorded. When the same set of symptoms are recorded in a diseased person, the medicine to be effective should be chosen keeping in mind the similarities between the symptoms given by patient and the ones produced by the medicine in a healthy human being. If they match each other and administered heigenically and off course in right potency. It will counter act and will eliminate the distressing symptoms and the diseased person will regain his health is dramatically short span of time.

In the case of diseases of the buceal cavity, even a very in significant looking mouth ulcer (which most of us take for granted), if not treated properly can lead to any eventuality, while if you take early precaution mercsol
