Aman Yaday

Dystopia

I fear the times that are to come. When all will happen, but our senses be numb. I fear the times when our children. Be sold in markets as labours. When the women be thrashed in the brothels and in every other house. When the men be slaughtered In the name of religion and race. When the humans will bow to other humans.

To quench the other's thirst of false pride. I wonder, was this the world, That God gave to us. And as I say this, I realize, The times that I feared have already come, When all is happening, but our senses being numb.
